On that fateful, windblown day on Ocean Beach, Cecilia—wearing her toasty handknit sweater and sensible yet dashing spectator shoes and toting a wicker basket full of yarn, as you do when going for a beachfront walk—literally tripped across her new business plan: Teaching freezing San Francisco tourists to equip themselves with woolens against the biting fog. (Brigitte, at right, was a bit behind her friends in completing their first class assignment: over-the-knee black socks, which could be rakishly rolled to just beneath the knee for that devil-may-care look.)

We hope you'll stumble into Bookshop West Portal for tomorrow night's stitch and bitch, 7:00 to 8:30 PM at 80 West Portal Avenue...

See you then!
